I received this movie as a gift, I knew from the DVD cover, this movie are going to be bad. After not watching it for more than a year I finally watched it. what a pathetic movie. I almost didn't finish watching this bad movie, but it will be unfair of me to write a review without watching the complete movie. Trust me when I say "this movie sucks" I am truly shocked that some bad filmmaker wane bee got even financed to make this pathetic movie, But it couldn't have cost more than $20 000 to produce this movie. all you need are a cheap camcorder or a cell phone camera .about 15 people with no acting skills, a scrip that were written by a couple of drunk people. In the first part of this ultra bad move a reporter (Tara Woodley )run a suppose to be drunk man over on her way to report on a hunted town. He are completely unharmed. They went to a supposed to be abandon house ,but luckily for the it almost complete furnished and a bottle of liquor on the door step happens to be there. just for the supposed to be drunk man but all is not what it seems. Then the supposed drunk man start telling Tara ghost/zombies stories. The first of his stupid lame stories must be the worst in history. his story Sgt. Ben Draper let one of his soldiers die of complete exhaustion (I think this is what happens) after letting the poor soldier private Wilson do sit ups he let him dig a grave and then the soldier collapse ,Ben Draper buries him in a shallow grave. But Sgt . Ben Draper are in for n big surprise. his wife/girl fiend knows about this and she and her lover kills Sgt. Ben Draper to take revenge on private Wilson. (next to the grave of the soldier he sort off murdered) The soldier wakes up from his grave in the form of zombie and kill them for taking revenge on his behalf. The twist ending were so lame. Even if you like B H ORROR movies, don't watch this movie

Preprocessing Block

The following cell contains code that will be referred to as the Preprocessing Block from now on. It contains a function that tokenizes the document passed to it, and functions that return counts of word types and tokens.

In [ ]:

Naive Bayes Block

This next block of code (referred to as Naive Bayes Block from now on) is something you will keep coming back to throughout the course of the assignment. There are several functions you need to implement here, that will be called in later parts of the assignment. Familiarize yourself with what each function does, as well as how everything comes together.

Part One: Intro to NLP in Python: types, tokens and Zipf's law

Types and tokens

One major part of any NLP project is word tokenization. Word tokenization is the task of segmenting text into individual words, called tokens. In this assignment, we will use simple whitespace tokenization. Take a look at the `tokenize_doc` function in the Preprocessing Block above. You should not modify `tokenize_doc` but make sure you understand what it is doing.

In [ ]:

```
d1 = "This SAMPLE doc has words tHat repeat repeat" bow = tokenize_doc(d1)

assert bow['this'] == 1 assert bow['sample'] == 1 assert bow['doc'] == 1 assert bow['has'] == 1 assert bow['words'] == 1 assert bow['that'] == 1 assert bow['repeat'] == 2

bow2 = tokenize_doc("NLP is my favorite class this semester!") for b in bow2:
    print (b)
```

nlp is my favorite class this semester!

Now we are going to look at the word types and word tokens in the corpus. Use the `word_counts` dictionary variable to store the count of each word in the corpus. Use the `tokenize_doc` function to break documents into tokens. You should not modify `tokenize_doc` but make sure you understand what it is doing.

Question 1.1 (5 points)

Complete the cell below to fill out the `word_counts` dictionary variable. `word_counts` keeps track of how many times a word type appears across the corpus. For instance, `word_counts["movie"]` should store the number 61492, the count of how many times the word `movie` appears in the corpus.

In [ ]:

```

import glob import codecs
word_counts = Counter() # Counters are often useful for NLP in python for label in [POS_LABEL, NEG_LABEL]:

    for directory in [TRAIN_DIR, TEST_DIR]:
        for fn in glob.glob(directory + "/" + label + "/*.txt"):
            doc = codecs.open(fn, 'r', 'utf8') # Open the file with UTF-8 enc bow = tokenize_doc (doc.read()) for token in bow:
                word_counts[token] += bow[token] pass
print(word_counts['movie'])

```

```

13516.0
26681.0
44052.0
61492.0

```

In [ ]:

```

if word_counts["movie"] == 61492:
    print ("yay! there are {} total instances of the word type movie in the c else:
    print ("hmm. Something seems off. Double check your code")

```

```
yay! there are 61492.0 total instances of the word type movie in the corpus

Question 1.2 (5 points)

Fill out the functions `n_word_types` , `n_word_tokens` in the Preprocessing Block.

Note: you will have to rerun the Preprocessing Block cell every time you change its code for it to have any effect!

In [ ]:

print ("there are {} word types in the corpus".format(n_word_types(word_count print ("there are {} word tokens in the corpus".format(n_word_tokens(word_cou

there are 390931 word types in the corpus there are 11557847.0 word tokens in the corpus

What is the difference between word types and tokens? Why are the number of tokens much higher than the number of types?

Answer in one or two lines here.

If we want to answer this question in detail. First of all we need to talk about some of the concepts here. In NLP, a token refers to a sequence of characters that represent a single unit of meaning in a text, like word or punctuation mark. A word type, on the other hand, refers to a unique word form or lexical item in a text. In other words, word types are the distinct words in the text, including repetitions.

The number of tokens is usually much higher than the number of types because a text contains many repetitive words, such as function words (e.g., "the", "of", "and", etc.), that are necessary for the grammatical structure of the sentence but do not convey much meaning on their own. The more function words in a text, the higher the ratio of tokens to types will be. For example, the phrase "the cat sat on the mat" contains six tokens but only five types, because "the" is repeated. This difference between types and tokens is an important factor to consider when working with NLP algorithms, such as in language modeling or sentiment analysis, as it can affect the accuracy of the analysis.

Question 1.3 (5 points)

Using the `word_counts` dictionary you just created, make a new dictionary called `sorted_dict` where the words are sorted according to their counts, in decending order:

In [ ]: # Add your code here sorted_dict = Counter() for key, value in sorted(word_counts.items(), key=lambda item: item[1], reverse=True):
    sorted_dict[key] = value
```

Now print the first 30 values from `sorted_dict`.

In [ ]: # Add your code here
count = 0
for word, count in sorted_dict.items():
    print(word, count)
    count += 1
    if count == 30:
        break

Zipf's Law

Question 1.4 (10 points)

In this section, you will verify a key statistical property of text: Zipf's Law.

Zipf's Law describes the relations between the frequency rank of words and frequency value of words. For a word  $w$ , its frequency is inversely proportional to its rank:

$$count_w = K \frac{1}{rank_w}$$

$K$  is a constant, specific to the corpus and how words are being defined.

What would this look like if you took the log of both sides of the equation?

Answer in one or two lines here.

$$\log(f) = -s * \log(r) + \log(k)$$

where  $\log$  is the natural logarithm,  $f$  is the frequency of a given word,  $r$  is its rank (i.e., its position in the frequency-sorted list),  $k$  is a constant of proportionality, and  $s$  is the slope of the log-log plot.

Therefore, if Zipf's Law holds, after sorting the words descending on frequency, word frequency decreases in an approximately linear fashion under a log-log scale.

Now, please make such a log-log plot by plotting the rank versus frequency

Hint: Make use of the sorted dictionary you just created. Use a scatter plot where the x-axis is the  $\log(rank)$ , and y-axis is  $\log(frequency)$ . You should get this information from `word_counts` ; for example, you can take the individual word counts and sort them. dict methods `.items()` and/or `values()` may be useful. (Note that it doesn't really matter whether ranks start at 1 or 0 in terms of how the plot comes out.) You can check your results by comparing your plots to ones on Wikipedia; they should look qualitatively similar.

Please remember to label the meaning of the x-axis and y-axis.

In [ ]:

```

import math import operator import matplotlib.pyplot as plt

x = range(1, len(sorted_dict) + 1)
y = [sorted_dict[key] for key in sorted_dict]
X_LABEL = "log(rank)"
Y_LABEL = "log(frequency)"

Add your code here
You should fill the x and y arrays.
Running this cell should produce your plot below.

Create a log-log plot which is used to specify
that both the x and y axes should be log-transformed.
plt.loglog(x, y)
plt.title('Word Frequencies in Corpus') plt.xlabel(X_LABEL)
plt.ylabel(Y_LABEL)
plt.show()

Part Two: Naive Bayes

This section of the homework will walk you through coding a Naive Bayes classifier that can distinguish between positive and negative reviews (with some level of accuracy).

Question 2.1 (10 pts)

To start, implement the `update_model` and `tokenize_and_update_model` functions in the Naive Bayes Block. Make sure to read the functions' comments so you know what to update. Also review the `NaiveBayes` class variables in the `def __init__` method of the `NaiveBayes` class to get a sense of which statistics are important to keep track of. Once you have implemented `update_model`, run the `train_model` function using the code below.

In [ ]:

Question 2.2 (5 points)

What is the first thing that you notice when you look at the top 10 words for the 2 classes? Are these words helpful for discriminating between the two classes? Do you imagine that processing other English text will result in a similar phenomenon? What about other languages?

Answer in one or two lines here.

The ten most frequent words for the two categories are ordinary words that do not significantly differentiate between the categories. This occurrence of frequent words being the top of the list is likely to be noticed in other English texts too. It may be possible that other languages have comparable patterns, but this would rely on the language and the characteristics of the text.

Question 2.3 (5 points)

The Naive Bayes model assumes that all features are conditionally independent given the class label. For our purposes, this means that the probability of seeing a particular word in a document with class label  $y$  is independent of the rest of the words in that document. Implement the `p_word_given_label` function in the Naive Bayes Block. This function calculates  $P(w|y)$  (i.e., the probability of seeing word  $w$  in a document given the label of that document is  $y$ ).

Use your `p_word_given_label` function to compute the probability of seeing the word "amazing" given each sentiment label. Repeat the computation for the word "dull."

In [ ]: print ("P('amazing'|pos):", nb.p_word_given_label("amazing", POS_LABEL))
        print ("P('amazing'|neg):", nb.p_word_given_label("amazing", NEG_LABEL))
        print ("P('dull'|pos):", nb.p_word_given_label("dull", POS_LABEL))
        print ("P('dull'|neg):", nb.p_word_given_label("dull", NEG_LABEL))

```
P('amazing'|pos): 0.00026158970837141145
P('amazing'|neg): 7.207586816769282e-05
P('dull'|pos): 3.278320634628799e-05
P('dull'|neg): 0.00014311218054450546

Which word has a higher probability, given the positive class? Which word has a higher probability, given the negative class? Is this behavior expected?

Answer in one or two lines here.

The probability of "amazing" is higher in the positive class than in the negative class, while "dull" has a higher probability in the negative class than in the positive class. This is anticipated since these words are more commonly used in their respective classes and can be considered as useful indicators of sentiment polarity.

In [ ]: # We can simply write some codes here to compare the probabilities and say wh
a higher probability in a specific class

Probability of "amazing" given positive label
p_amazing_pos = nb.p_word_given_label("amazing", POS_LABEL)
Probability of "amazing" given negative label
p_amazing_neg = nb.p_word_given_label("amazing", NEG_LABEL)

Probability of "dull" given positive label
p_dull_pos = nb.p_word_given_label("dull", POS_LABEL)
Probability of "dull" given negative label
p_dull_neg = nb.p_word_given_label("dull", NEG_LABEL)

Print the word with the higher probability for each sentiment label
if p_amazing_pos > p_amazing_neg:
    print("The word 'amazing' is more likely to appear in positive reviews.")
else:
    print("The word 'amazing' is more likely to appear in negative reviews.") if p_dull_pos > p_dull_neg:

    print("The word 'dull' is more likely to appear in positive reviews.")
else:
    print("The word 'dull' is more likely to appear in negative reviews.")
```

The word 'amazing' is more likely to appear in positive reviews.
The word 'dull' is more likely to appear in negative reviews.

Question 2.4 (5 points)

In the next cell, compute the probability of the word "car-thievery" in the positive training data and negative training data.

In [ ]: print ("P('car-thievery'|pos):", nb.p_word_given_label("car-thievery", POS_L
print ("P('car-thievery'|neg):", nb.p_word_given_label("car-thievery", NEG_L
```

P('car-thievery'|pos): 3.37971199446268e-07
P('car-thievery'|neg): 0.0

What is unusual about  $P(\text{'car-thievery'}|\text{neg})$ ? What would happen if we took the log of  $P(\text{'car-thievery'}|\text{neg})$ ? What would happen if we multiplied  $P(\text{'car-thievery'}|\text{neg})$  by  $P(\text{'dull'}|\text{neg})$ ? Why might these operations cause problems for a Naive Bayes classifier?

Answer in one or two lines here.

In [ ]:

```

import math

log of "P('car-thievery'|neg)"
try:
    print("log(P('car-thievery'|neg)):", math.log(nb.p_word_given_label("car-
except ValueError:
    print("log(P('car-thievery'|neg)):", "-inf")

multiply "P('car-thievery'|neg)" by "P('dull'|neg)"
try:
    print("P('car-thievery'|neg) * P('dull'|neg):", nb.p_word_given_label("ca
except ValueError:
    print("P('car-thievery'|neg) * P('dull'|neg):", 0.0)

```

```

log(P('car-thievery'|neg)): -inf
P('car-thievery'|neg) * P('dull'|neg): 0.0

The probability of 'car-thievery' given the negative class,  $P(\text{'car-thievery'}|\text{neg})$ , is zero. This indicates that the word "car-thievery" is not present in the negative training data. However, computing the logarithm of 0 is not possible and multiplying  $P(\text{'car-thievery'}|\text{neg})$  by  $P(\text{'dull'}|\text{neg})$  could result in a zero value, which can create issues when using Naive Bayes, as the probability of the entire document would be zero.

Question 2.5 (5 points)

We can address the issues from question 2.4 with add- $\alpha$  smoothing (like add-1 smoothing except instead of adding 1 we add  $\alpha$ ). Implement `p_word_given_label_and_alpha` in the Naive Bayes Block and then run the next cell.

Hint: look at the slides from the lecture on add-1 smoothing.

In [ ]:

```

P('stop-sign.'|pos): 6.646374399441918e-08

Question 2.6 (5 points)

Prior and Likelihood

As noted before, the Naive Bayes model assumes that all words in a document are independent of one another given the document's label. Because of this we can write the likelihood of a document as:

$$P(w_{d1}, \dots, w_{dn} | y_d) = \prod_{i=1}^n P(w_{di} | y_d)$$

However, if a document has a lot of words, the likelihood will become extremely small and we'll encounter numerical underflow. Underflow is a common problem when dealing with probabilistic models; if you are unfamiliar with it, you can get a brief overview on Wikipedia. To deal with underflow, a common transformation is to work in log-space.

$$\log[P(w_{d1}, \dots, w_{dn} | y_d)] = \sum_{i=1}^n \log[P(w_{di} | y_d)]$$

Implement the `log_likelihood` function in the Naive Bayes Block. Hint: it should make calls to the `p_word_given_label_and_alpha` function.

Implement the `log_prior` function in the Naive Bayes Block. This function takes a class label and returns the log of the fraction of the training documents that are of that label.

Question 2.7 (5 points)

Naive Bayes is a model that tells us how to compute the posterior probability of a document being of some label (i.e.,  $P(y_d|\mathbf{w}_d)$ ). Specifically, we do so using bayes rule:

$$P(y_d|\mathbf{w}_d) = \frac{P(y_d)P(\mathbf{w}_d|y_d)}{P(\mathbf{w}_d)}$$

In the previous section you implemented functions to compute both the log prior ( $\log[P(y_d)]$ ) and the log likelihood ( $\log[P(\mathbf{w}_d|y_d)]$ ). Now, all you're missing is the normalizer,  $P(\mathbf{w}_d)$ .

Derive the normalizer by expanding  $P(\mathbf{w}_d)$ .

Answer in one or two lines here. Provide the formula and define each term in this formula.

The formula for the normalizer would be:  $P(\mathbf{w}_d) = \sum_k P(y_d=k).P(\mathbf{w}_d|y_d=k)$  where  $P(\mathbf{w}_d)$  is the probability of the document.  $P(y_d=k)$  is the prior probability of the document being of class  $k$ . and  $P(\mathbf{w}_d|y_d=k)$  is the likelihood of the document given class  $k$ .

Question 2.8 (5 points)

One way to classify a document is to compute the unnormalized log posterior for both labels and take the argmax (i.e., the label that yields the higher unnormalized log posterior). The unnormalized log posterior is the sum of the log prior and the log likelihood of the document.

Why don't we need to compute the log normalizer here?

Answer in one or two lines here.

When we're only interested in finding the highest probability class for a document, we can skip computing the log normalizer. The log normalizer is a scaling factor that makes sure the probabilities of all labels add up to 1, by computing the logarithm of the sum of exponential probabilities. However, because we're only interested in the highest probability class, we don't need to scale the probabilities. We can ignore the log normalizer, and still correctly classify the document by finding the unnormalized log posterior for each label and selecting the label with the highest score.

Question 2.9 (10 points)

As we saw earlier, the top 10 words from each class do not give us much to go on when classifying a document. A much more powerful metric is the likelihood ratio, which is defined as

$$LR(w) = \frac{P(w|y=\text{pos})}{P(w|y=\text{neg})}$$

A word with LR 3 is 3 times more likely to appear in the positive class than in the negative. A word with LR 0.3 is one-third as likely to appear in the positive class as opposed to the negative class.

In [ ]:

```
Implement the nb.likelihood_ratio function and use it to investigate the lik
print ("LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'amazing':", nb.likelihood_ratio('amazing', 0.2)) print ("LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'dull':", nb.likelihood_ratio('dull', 0.2)) print ("LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'and':", nb.likelihood_ratio('and', 0.2)) print ("LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'to':", nb.likelihood_ratio('to', 0.2))

```
LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'amazing': 3.628350587556548
LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'dull': 0.22953174277018223
LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'and': 1.1869527527674362
LIKELIHOOD RATIO OF 'to': 0.9438077915764572

What is the minimum and maximum possible values the likelihood ratio can take? Does it make sense that  $LR('amazing') > LR('to')$ ?

Answer in one or two lines here.

The likelihood ratio has a minimum value of 0, indicating that the probability of the word appearing in both classes is equal. On the other hand, it has a maximum value of infinity, indicating that the word appears exclusively in one class. The fact that  $LR('amazing') > LR('to')$  is reasonable because 'amazing' is a more reliable indicator of positive sentiment than 'to'.

Find the word in the vocabulary with the highest likelihood ratio below.

In [ ]: # Add your code here best_word = "" best_lr = 0.0
for word in nb.vocab:
    lr = nb.likelihood_ratio(word, alpha=0.2)
    if lr > best_lr:
        best_word = word best_lr = lr print(f"The word with the highest likelihood ratio is '{best_word}' with LR =
```

The word with the highest likelihood ratio is 'edie' with LR = 401.03

Question 2.10 (5 points)

The unnormalized log posterior is the sum of the log prior and the log likelihood of the document. Implement the `unnormalized_log_posterior` function and the `classify` function in the Naive Bayes Block. The `classify` function should use the unnormalized log posteriors but should not compute the normalizer. Once you implement the `classify` function, we'd like to evaluate its accuracy.

In [ ]: print (nb.evaluate_classifier_accuracy(0.2))
```

Question 2.11 (5 points)

Try evaluating your model again with a smoothing parameter of 1000.

We can evaluate our model with different smoothing parameter and find the highest accuracy. We can use our previously developed code just add another part for checking the accuracy of the model with different alpha smoothing parameter.

Good ending, not saying that it is bad... just leaves you wondering, and a little frazzled.Great movie for those who like action, like a good plot (dont get up for a bathroom break on this movie, you will come back lost) and like mind games, because thats exactly in a nutshell what this is.

neg: In Los Angeles, the alcoholic and lazy Hank Chinaski (Matt Dillon) performs a wide range of non-qualified functions just to get enough money to drink and gamble in horse races. His primary and only objective is writing and having sexy with dirty women."Factotum" is an uninteresting, pointless and extremely boring movie about an irresponsible drunken vagrant that works a couple of days or weeks just to get enough money to buy spirits and gamble, being immediately fired due to his reckless behavior. In accordance with IMDb, this character would be the fictional alter-ego of the author Charles Bukowski, and based on this story, I will certainly never read any of his novels. Honestly, if the viewer likes this theme of alcoholic couples, better off watching the touching and heartbreaking Hector Babenco's "Ironweed" or Marco Ferreri's "Storie di Ordinaria Follia" that is based on the life of the same writer. My vote is four.Title (Brazil): "Factotum □ Sem Destino" ("Factotum □ Without Destiny")

Negative words in pos review: This was a great movie, I would compare it to the movie The Game. You get to the end of the flick and cant move... your brain has been removed and shaken (not stirred) and put back in your head. Dont plan anything after this movie, you will need time to think about what just happened.Dont come to this movie expecting the Matrix style multi millions spent on special effects, this movies special effects come from the actors, they keep you involved, no, they suck you in and dont let go for the entire duration of the movie. Great acting, great plot... very enjoyable film, I cant say enough. Also very original plot, plenty of twists and ideas that I would have never thought of. The ending is abrupt and leaves you hanging wondering, was that real? Is this really the end? Good ending, not saying that it is bad... just leaves you wondering, and a little frazzled.Great movie for those who like action, like a good plot (dont get up for a bathroom break on this movie, you will come back lost) and like mind games, because thats exactly in a nutshell what this is.

Negative words in neg review: Alan Rickman & Emma Thompson give good performances with southern/New Orleans accents in this detective flick. It's worth seeing for their scenes- and Rickman's scene with Hal Holbrook. These three actors manage to entertain us no matter what the movie, it seems. The plot for the movie shows potential, but one gets the impression in watching the film that it was not pulled off as well as it could have been. The fact that it is cluttered by a rather uninteresting subplot and mostly uninteresting kidnappers really muddles things. The movie is worth a view- if for nothing more than entertaining performances by Rickman, Thompson, and Holbrook.

What are two reasons your system might have misclassified this example? What improvements could you make that may help your system classify this example correctly?

Answer in one or two lines here.

Reasons for misclassification:

The model may not have adequately learned to identify certain patterns that distinguish negative words, given the limited amount of training data available. Furthermore, the ambiguity of the example makes it open to different interpretations, which can further complicate the model's ability to accurately classify the sentiment.

Possible ways to improve the model:

Gather additional training data and enhance the feature representation by implementing more sophisticated methodologies like deep learning.

Question 2.13 (5 points)

Often times we care about multi-class classification rather than binary classification.

How many counts would we need to keep track of if the model were modified to support 5-class classification?

Answer in one or two lines here.

Maintain the frequency of each word for every class, taking into account the risk of increased computational cost and potential model overfitting with additional training. Additionally, be cautious when introducing new classes that may cause class imbalance.

Extra Credit (Up to 10 points)

If you don't want to do the extra credit, you can stop here! Otherwise... keep reading... In this assignment, we use whitespace tokenization to create a bag-of-unigrams representation for the movie reviews. It is possible to improve this representation to improve your classifier's performance. Use your own code or an external library such as `nlTK` to perform tokenization, text normalization, word filtering, etc. Fill out your work in `def tokenize_doc_and_more` (below) and then show improvement by running the cells below.

Roughly speaking, the larger performance improvement, the more extra credit. We will also give points for the effort in the evaluation and analysis process. For example, you can split the training data into training and validation set to prevent overfitting, and report results from trying different versions of features. You can also provide some qualitative examples you found in the dataset to support your choices on preprocessing steps. Whatever you choose to try, make sure to describe your method and the reasons that you hypothesize for why the method works. Be sure to explain what your code is doing.

Use cells at the bottom of this notebook to explain what you did in `tokenize_doc_and_more`. Include any experiments or explanations that you used to decide what goes in your function. Doing a good job examining, explaining and justifying your work with small experiments and comments is as important as making the accuracy number go up!

Explain what you did here.

1. The code imported two libraries called "word_tokenize" and "PorterStemmer" from "nltk.tokenize" and "nltk.stem", respectively. Additionally, it downloaded the "punkt" package from "nltk".
2. Then, the "word_tokenize" function was used to split the document into individual words, and the "PorterStemmer" function was used to find the root of each word.
3. To standardize capitalization, all words were converted to lowercase.
4. The "bag-of-words" was sorted into a "defaultdict", and the count for each word was initially set to 1.0.
5. The counts of each word were normalized by dividing them by the length of the document.
6. Finally, the code returned the "bag-of-words" representation of the document.

How to submit this problem set:

Write all the answers in this iPython notebook. Once you are finished (1) generate the PDF file ( File -> Print Preview , and print to PDF), 2) ZIP the PDF and this Jupyter Notebook (.ipynb), and 3) upload the ZIP file to Canvas.

Important: check your PDF before you turn it in to Canvas to make sure it exported correctly.

When creating your final version of the PDF to hand in, please do a fresh restart and execute every cell in order. Then you'll be sure it's actually right. One handy way to do this is by clicking Runtime -> Run All in the notebook menu.
